There are some simple steps to follow in order to create APA citations. First, you need to find out which kind of source it is. Is it a book, a journal article or a newspaper article? Then you need to find the author, the title of the article, the year of publication and the pages. After that, you need to add a short description of the source (about a line).

To create APA citations, you need to follow some simple rules:

Every citation must be formatted in the following order: author's name, year of publication, page number. The title of the source should be written in italics.

The title of the source must be written in italics.

The year of publication must be written in parentheses.

If the author is unknown, you need to use the abbreviation "n.d." (no date).

And the page number must be written in parentheses.

A short description of the source must be written in brackets.

So, if you need to create citations for your homework or you are going to write
